Prevent Pet Fatalities in Hot Cars This Summer

Leaving pets in a parked car, even with windows cracked, can quickly become fatal. Within minutes, temperatures can exceed 38°C (100°F), causing pets to suffer irreversible organ damage or death. Dogs, unable to sweat, rely on panting and paw heat release to cool themselves but can endure only 15-20 minutes in extreme heat.

- Pets are happier and safer at home on hot summer days. Leave them with shade, fresh water, and avoid guilt.
- If you must travel with pets, keep them cool.
- If a pet is left in a hot car, note the license plate and ask nearby businesses to page the owner. If no owner is found or the animal is in distress, call the local SPCA or 911 for emergencies.
